
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NEW YORK, April 20.—Attorney McIntyre, for the defense, said today that if Charles Hains, in the case against her husband, Captain Peter Hains, Jr., that never yet published letters to her in the Philadelphia, he says, "I have written some additional letters written by the captain to his wife, but Mr. Hains refused to discuss them."

The trouble case in which Deputy Ward O'Brien and Under Sheriff Haines were bringing Captain Hains from Long Island City to Philadelphia to stand on the way here at Jefferson and Jackson avenues. A covered bridge's bridge was on the way here at Jefferson and Jackson avenues. A covered bridge's bridge was on the way here at Jefferson and Jackson avenues.

Relies on the Judge.

"I don't see how anything else can be done in this instance than the appointment of a commissioner," said John T. McIntyre, the senior counsel for the defense, "and the commissioner will be the judge of the case."

Will Look Up the Jury.

The difficulty of getting the jury was added to yesterday when the foreman of the jury, who had been selected for the case, was found to be unavailable.

PAINFUL TREATMENT OF SCIATICA

Of the many forms of rheumatism, sciatica, which is popularly known as sciatic rheumatism, probably tortures in vain more than any other. That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured as many as well as painful sciatica is fact proved by the following statement, and so another who reads this statement, let us say, "I am a doctor, and I have cured many cases of sciatica with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

"MR. TETRAZINT" IS A PHANTOM

NEW YORK, April 20.—On the passenger list of the North Georgia line from Philadelphia, which sailed today for New York, appeared the name of "Mr. and Mrs. Tetrazint." It was a name which was naturally assumed to be a phantom, as it was not on the list of passengers who had been on the ship.

COTE KNOCKED OUT BY BROCK

SALEM, April 29.—Palt Brock of Cleveland knocked out Arthur Cole of Biddford in the sixth round at the Apollo Club. Brock showed up as a classic fighter. The first three rounds were even, and then Brock began to get in left swings on Cole's jaw and lead him going. In the fifth Brock got at Cole's jaw and had him groggy, but the swinging blows. In the sixth a left swing on the jaw floored Cole, when he took the count.

The preliminaries were uninteresting.

SAM LANGFORD HERE

Negotiations are on for a bout between Sandy Ferguson and Sam Langford here. The fight will take place at the Armory A. A. on April 27th.

Dave Deshler and Freddy Welsh are billed for that night, but there is strong possibility that Welsh and Ferguson will have that date instead.

Representatives of Ferguson and Langford have agreed upon all the details except the date of the referee. Ferguson is satisfied with anybody the champions, Langford calls next week for England to keep his eye on the National Sporting Club of London. Edith

THE JOURNAL OF A NEGLECTED WIFE

SYNOPSIS.
A wife whose husband has been kind of lame, and who has been neglected for years, finds out that her husband is not what she thought he was. She finds out that he has been a very bad man, and that he has been neglecting her for years. She finds out that he has been a very bad man, and that he has been neglecting her for years. She finds out that he has been a very bad man, and that he has been neglecting her for years.

THE LETTER WRITTEN AND THE LETTER SENT.
THE LETTER WRITTEN.
I AM going to write you the truth. The truth that for three years I have hid with the best of intentions, and I have now to tell you the truth.

How I have loved you, that has been my one comfort since I have been to you. I have loved you, that has been my one comfort since I have been to you. I have loved you, that has been my one comfort since I have been to you. I have loved you, that has been my one comfort since I have been to you.

❖ Little Bobbie's Pa

By William F. Kirk

Copyright, 1900, by American-Journal-Examiner

"And as you know yourself, our most able public men are not exactly of the handsome order, and in case women voted, I doubt if they ever would have obtained their high position."

The Boston American advocates giving women the vote because it knows that women are the best possible judges of men and would vote for the best men.

Didn't Queen Elizabeth rely on Lord Burleigh, keeping him in power when she was chopping off the head of handsomer men? Burleigh was ugly.

She wanted to reach ONE man whom she had picked out as able and worth while. She sent him a handsome rug, and when it was unrolled before him she rolled out on the floor, dressed in a costume at that time

And after they had murdered Caesar, in whose house she had lived, what did Cleopatra do by way of a second choice? She picked out Antony, the very man that Caesar had picked out as the ablest man.

So it has ever been and so it ever will be. Women recognize power in men. They recognize intuitively honesty and intelligence. Women voting would be guided in their choice by the deep, mysterious wisdom accumulated during the hundreds of centuries, WHEN THE SAFETY OF THE FAMILY RELIED UPON THE MOTHER'S PERCEPTION AND QUICKNESS OF THOUGHT.

Mr. Butler, of New Haven, need not worry about women. Give them the vote and they will use it well.

the vote and the will use it well.

"No," said my friend, "I do not find her interesting. I do not find her amusing, and I do not owe her money or anything else, but she's a woman of fine character and though I don't like her a bit, I love her."

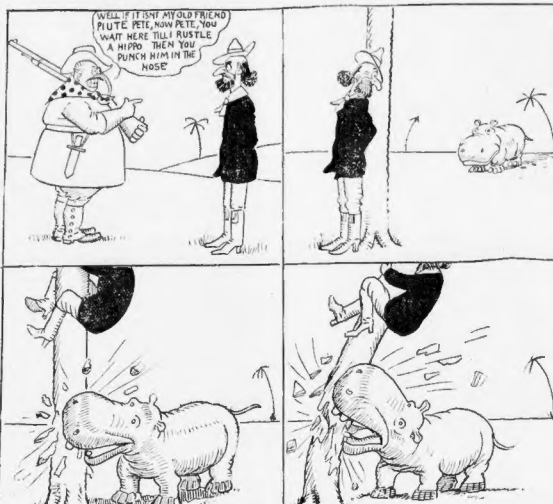

"She went her younger brother to school on money that she earned herself by writing three good novels, and she says I've never seen a man ever try to read them."

She is devoted itself to her invalid mother, and she is the most industrious, economical sinner, and frugal person I ever saw.

"When some one's talking and saying and doing and contradicting and interrupting, I keep saying over and over in my mind—unselfish, devoted, industrious, kind, generous, and so on, and after getting a bit of a rosey—and so we get on beautifully together."

I wonder if my friend's way is the right way?

I wonder if we ought to like people for the really fine things they do instead of being so much more for the silly, annoying things they say?

A two-panel cartoon. The first panel shows a man in a suit being crushed by a large elephant. The second panel shows the man in bed, looking shocked and saying, "I WAS BUT A DREAM, IM SO GLAD!". The cartoon is signed "TUFNER" in the bottom right corner.

A NOTORIOUS bookshop keeper was once asked how he kept his books.

"We have a simple system. It is simple."

A house of cards, if it be permitted to operate at all, is under the surveillance of the police authorities; and if by an inconceivable chance a casual forger guesses the right color, card or number, he is paid a "wheeler," even among gamblers is despised and ostracized.

"We take the customer's money and in return give him the tape. The result always has been despised and ostracized.

A bucketshop, however, is a thoroughly lawless and practical affair. It is a subject to no exchange, to no authority. The Federal Government makes apocryphal attempts to stop the mails of the swindler and even to indict the keeper, but it is

That is the general experience. But there are exceptions now and then which emphasize the infant rule of bucketshop feeding and embezzlement. On very rare occasions the crowd has a credit balance. When such a winning happens it is heavy, for if the luck of the foolish and credulous is very infrequent it is opulent—on paper

—Then it occurs.
—Then the keeper's system also operates simply. He fails to pay his losses. His creditors, when they wish to collect, find him dead. He and the keeper go to Cuba or Mexico or Anabania—which confirms another edifying aphorism of one of these propheetists:
—'When I make money I keep it; when my customers are ahead I save it by selling myself."

In a measure the law and the stock exchanges and the boards of trade protect people who buy and sell securities or commodities speculatively, through members of the exchanges—specialists.

Three-card monte is a gilt-edge investment in comparison with these slicking devices; the shell manipulator is financially chivalrous compared with the average bucket-shop keeper, who, when he does not sell, manipulates prices crookedly.

of the houses. A membership—especially in the New York Institution, where nearly 800,000—imposes a financial and moral obligation that there is an honorable failure there are assets and promissory notes to be divided among creditors. It devolves upon a failed firm to arrange a settlement satisfactory to its clients. If the insolvency be dishonorable there is criminality in the failure. It is to win squarely, win crookedly.

There is a remedy, a rough and ready one. Let the police pull the places apart. Let the courts preclude the elaborate official procedure and the legal subtleties that render timid and hesitant the postoffice department. Where a firm is in a position to put up a fight, where it offers to deal in stocks and bonds and credits on a very thin margin, it is

COLONEL ROOSEVELT'S hunting trip to Africa, the appeal of the Republic of Liberia for aid from the United States, the discovery of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers still flow with their ancient vigor—and a new Babylonia can rise on the ruins of cities five thousand years old.

United States Government to save it from its dry rot and approaching extinction. The German enterprise of the reclamation of Mesopotamia, its own movement to fructify our vast "semi-arid" and arid domain, the recrudescence of Cipriano Castro, and, as a "man without a country" and, finally, all things, though seemingly unrelated, point to the same final development of the civilized world.

Colonel Roosevelt will bring back a story—challenging attention because of its author's eminence—about the future of Africa being in the establishment of white civilization on the high plateaux—the bald spots—of the Dark Continent. Then it may become, indeed, the planet's continent.

The mass of humid jungle is fit only for savages, barbarians and wild beasts. Let them have it and rule it.

But the great bald uplands, with healthy climate, fertile soil, no unsolvable problem of humidity, are the planet's best spots.

And the same soil as that of Egypt and climate, because of insects and freedom from the breeding spirit of tropical fevers, are only sparsely occupied by aborigines.

It is not necessary to murder millions to civilize these mighty tablelands.

Africa's bold spots are as open and rich for white occupation as our Western Liberia is hopeless because the American negroes who established it have tried to make it a nation instead of a colony. Instead of making the American uplands were when the buffalo and muskox roamed over them in enormous herds, and even the grizzly bears, now solitary beasts, lived in large companies.

live in the humid east region instead of in the high hinterland.

Modern Mesopotamia—a dreary desert waste—is still seamed with the canals which were the reason for the civilization that by the still magic name of Babylon has not water to them once more—the mighty rivers on the plateau.

The rain is there, but it flows off. Highly civilized man can prevent it from flowing off uselessly. He can catch a storm here it, and, with virgin soil, can equate a mile of rain to an insect or animal waste. Industrial vapors, thrive as man has never thrived before.

Civilization's future is in the held upon
